'The Elephant in the Darwinian Room'

Dr Mark Harwood

150 years after the publication of the Origin of Species by Charles Darwin, what does the scientific evidence say about origins? Data collection and research in many scientific disciplines has led to a vast amount of information about living organisms, past and present. But what does it say? Does it point to unguided random processes over vast periods of time or does it point to the initial action of an intelligent designer with subsequent variation within genetic limits?

When scientific data is interpreted, it is done so in the light of the worldview, or belief system, of the scientist. Fundamentally different worldviews lead to fundamentally different interpretations of the same data. This is nowhere more apparent than in the field of origins science where the conflict of belief in evolution with belief in creation fuels the debate. Dr Harwood will present the case for the opening chapters of Genesis as being the true historical account of origins. The scientific data based on observable repeatable experiments is entirely consistent with the Biblical record. The challenge is to be prepared to go where the evidence leads!
